

The people of Fruitvale, today, have stories to tell about how food is important to them.

32
Arabella Martinez remembers foods in the 1940s in Colorado

33
Alma en Paz talks about World War II foods

34
Rosario Flores remembers Fruitvale's Del Monte cannery

35
Ruben Vallejo remembers food for farmworkers in the 1950s

36
Arturo Pena, local baker, on how he learned to make Mexican pastries

37
Beverly Blythe on growing up in Texas in the 1950s

38
Jose Arredondo on his mother's holiday food

39
Claudia Albano on Italian food

40
Tawanda Gilbert growing up in Fruitvale in the 1970s

41
Khoa Hua remembers French and Vietnamese foods in VietNam

42
Tamon Perrelliat tells about 21st century family feasts

43
Meui Chin Saelee remembers Laos in the 1970s

44
Numurray Wallace on African American foods and Labor Day on Salisbury Street

45
Beverly Enz and Alice Scalberg, great great granddaughters of Antonio Peralta and Maria Antonia Galindo, learn family history over pound cake and cherry wine

46
Ramona Garibay carries on Ohlone traditions

47
Ruth Orta on using African baskets for Ohlone cooking